Cannibalism can be broken down into two main categories: exocannibalism, the eating of outsiders or foreigners, and endocannibalism, the eating of members of one's own social group (Shipman 70). Within these categories are several functional types of cannibalism, three of the most common, being survival cannibalism, dietary cannibalism, and religious and ritual cannibalism.

I will focus here on two of Mitchell's main reasons supporting the ban on performance-enhancing drugs: health risks and fairness.

Highly organized competitive sports such as Pee wee Football and Little League Baseball are too often played to adult standards, which are developmentally inappropriate for children and can be both physically and psychologically harmful.
